ALICE AT HOME

ALYSE KNORR

Made a calendar out of her hair on the pillow each day marks one strand less startling there dark S swerve in the milk sheets margin trophy survey of loss

That first night she reached for my hips dizzy with whiskey growling between us two women at the threshold of something nickel-edged and toxic at the threshold of her door she put something in my hand when I looked at the bus stop it was change
ALICE RECALLS HER FIRST MEETING WITH JENNY

Striped sage in the menswear section looking at ties—Ties earn more tips she said They think it’s sexy and there I was tucking my scattered odds away, shaky and squidlike before my offering, my boilpoint—my love.
Starved for a sip of her mouth then, but the real plague was still months to come.
Now with my last kamikaze breath:
I thought you were all eyes, too.

ALICE SKETCHES

A space an emptiness a woman a potentiality a field a saucer a man growing older eating chili out of a paper cup a hole a thought before it has faded a drain a dress milk a staff on a page of music a room a cancer a blight an owl in the cells a parking lot full a phone ringing a man on TV talks about reading books a moon
